Market Review

As expected, the Reserve Bank of Australia maintained its monetary stimulus by holding the cash rate at 0.25% through the June quarter. The central bank has repeatedly indicated 0.25% is likely the lower-bound for the cash rate and that taking this to zero or into negative territory is unlikely. Australian money market rates meanwhile climbed significantly over the quarter as the pandemic-related panic faded away. The three-month bank bill rate ended the quarter at 1.02% (up from 0.36%), while the six-month rate closed at 1.60% (up from 0.53%).
