Market Review

The RBA held the official cash rate at the record low of 0.10% through the March quarter, while continuing its $200 billion quantitative easing program, which involves the central bank purchasing government bonds in a bid to further stimulate spending and growth. The RBA has been very clear it will not increase the cash rate until actual inflation is sustainably within the 2 to 3 percent target range, which will require materially higher wages growth and a tight labour market, a situation the central bank does not expect to occur until around 2024. In Australian money markets, the three-month bank bill rate ended the month at 0.035% (up from 0.01%), while the six-month rate closed at 0.085% (up from 0.03%).
