Market Review

Global long-dated government bond yields moved sharply higher over the March quarter as continued progress towards worldwide mass vaccination fuelled expectations for a rebound in global economic activity. Legislative approval of the Biden Administration's $US1.9 trillion stimulus package and stronger than expected US economic data releases, in particular retail sales, industrial production and job openings, stoked inflation expectations despite Fed Chair Powell saying that "the economy is a long way from our employment and inflation goal". ECB President Lagarde adopted a similarly cautious tone, saying that European monetary policy remains accommodative and that further quantitative easing will be introduced if necessary. The US 10-year bond yield ended the quarter 82 basis points higher at 1.74%. The German 10-year bond yield rose by 28 basis points to -0.29% and its Japanese counterpart rose by seven basis points to 0.09%. Global bonds, as measured by the Bloomberg Barclays Global Aggregate Index (hedged), fell by 2.53% for the period (in Australian dollar terms).

Outlook

The Reserve Bank of Australia (RBA) is maintaining its yield curve control policy. Monetary policy has reduced volatility at the front end of curve and provides attractive opportunities in the mid-curve for carry and roll. However, there has been more recent upward pressure on global yields which is feeding through to the Australian market. Given the structural issues around an indebted consumer sector and upward pressure on the dollar, the RBA will more likely ease further at this juncture rather than tighten monetary policy, unless global conditions significantly change events. However, we expect the current low volatility in Australian rates to continue for the time being.
