Mark's story

Mark, a 49-year-old physiotherapist, sustained a back injury, which resulted in him being unable to work in his own occupation.

With the assistance of AMP's occupational rehabilitation support, which included an analysis of his skills, as well as job seeking and interview assistance, Mark was successful in securing a new higher-paying consultancy role, which didn't have the physical demands of his previous occupation.

Mark acknowledged that without the support of the AMP Recovery team he would not have had the confidence to secure his new occupation.

Sara's story

Sara returned to suitable alternative employment after experiencing a mental illness, because she was unfit to return to her pre-disability work as director of a logistics firm.

Following treatment and signs of improvement in her condition, Sara accepted AMP's offer of assistance through our occupational rehabilitation program offering. AMP co-ordinated the program, which included professional counselling to look for alternative work options, retraining assistance and support. The tailored services were aimed at developing new skills and experience, as well as building her confidence. As a result, she successfully secured employment as a real estate agent.
