Market Review

Australian cash and deposits are still providing poor returns, with interest rates remaining on hold at 1.5% for what has become a protracted period of time. Reserve bank commentary has progressively become more dovish during in recent months, with a fall in interest rates now looking likely, particularly if inflation or growth continues to disappoint, or if unemployment were to surprise on the downside. Three and six-month Australian bank bill rates closed the quarter at 1.77% and 1.84% respectively, down from 2.06% and 2.18% three months prior.
